The season was filled with memorable moments, including the infamous "Ice Bowl" in the NFL Championship Game. The game was played in sub-zero temperatures, and it was one of the most brutal games in NFL history. The Packers won the game, 21-17, and they went on to win their third straight NFL championship.

The Green Bay Packers

The Green Bay Packers were the dominant team in the NFL in the 1960s. They were led by legendary quarterback Bart Starr, and they had a number of other stars, including wide receiver Boyd Dowler, running back Jim Taylor, and defensive end Willie Davis. The Packers won five NFL championships in the 1960s, and they were one of the most successful teams in NFL history.

In 1967, the Packers were looking to win their third straight NFL championship. They had a talented team, and they were confident that they could beat any team in the league. However, the Packers faced a number of challenges during the season. They had a number of injuries, and they also had to deal with the pressure of being the defending champions.

Despite the challenges, the Packers managed to win the NFL Western Conference with a record of 9-4-1. They then defeated the Los Angeles Rams in the NFL Championship Game to advance to the Super Bowl.

The Dallas Cowboys

The Dallas Cowboys were a rising power in the NFL in the 1960s. They were led by quarterback Don Meredith, and they had a number of other stars, including wide receiver Bob Hayes, running back Don Perkins, and defensive end Bob Lilly. The Cowboys won the NFL Eastern Conference in 1967 with a record of 9-5. They then defeated the Cleveland Browns in the NFL Championship Game to advance to the Super Bowl.

The Cowboys were a confident team, and they believed that they could defeat the Packers in the Super Bowl. They had a number of talented players, and they were well-coached by Tom Landry.

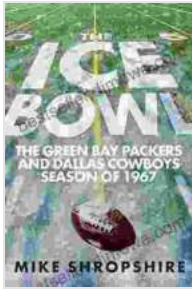

The Super Bowl

The Super Bowl was played on January 15, 1968, at the Los Angeles Coliseum. The game was a close contest, and it was not decided until the final minutes. The Packers won the game, 33-14, and they won their third straight NFL championship.

The Super Bowl was a major victory for the Packers, and it cemented their status as one of the greatest teams in NFL history. The Cowboys lost the game, but they proved that they were a team to be reckoned with. They would go on to win their first Super Bowl in 1972.
