Early Life and Boxing Beginnings

Born in 1949 in the working-class town of Worksop, England, Steve Ward's life was marked by challenges from a young age. As a teenager, he discovered boxing as a way to channel his frustrations and prove himself. With a raw determination, he began training at a local boxing club, honing his skills and developing a love for the sport.

Professional Boxing Career

Steve Ward's professional boxing career began in 1968. Fighting in the light welterweight and welterweight divisions, he faced numerous opponents in the British boxing circuit. While he achieved some notable victories, he also experienced setbacks and injuries along the way. Despite the challenges, Ward's unwavering spirit kept him in the ring.

Retirement and Return to Boxing

In 1984, after a 16-year professional career, Ward decided to retire from boxing. He had fought over 100 fights, leaving behind a legacy of determination and toughness. However, in 2016, at the age of 67, Ward surprised the world by announcing his return to professional boxing.
