Beth Szymkowski, a cheerful and spirited teenager

The Night She Disappeared

On that fateful January evening, Beth had an argument with her parents over her curfew. Frustrated and upset, she stormed out of the house around 10:30 pm. Witnesses spotted her walking alone down the street, her backpack slung over her shoulder.

As the hours turned into days, fear and desperation gripped Beth's family and friends. Searches were organized, but came up empty. There were no signs of foul play, no demands for ransom, and no trace of Beth was ever found.

A Family's Unending Search

In the years that followed, Beth's parents, John and Shirley Szymkowski, refused to give up hope. They tirelessly pursued every lead, consulted with private investigators, and organized public awareness campaigns. They dedicated their lives to finding their daughter and bringing her home.
